With interests in the intersections of architectural representation, the body, and technicities beside those of typical architectural production, I am an aspiring researcher-practitioner working towards building a body of work that considers architecture in its other media. My research over the past few years has focused on developing modes of novel representation for architecture and the problematisation of familiar ones, particularly in Japanese examples. Recently, I have been focusing on understanding design through its technical processes from inception through fabrication and exploring the ways in which a technic-orineted methodology might expand the architectural discipline. My research into this spans dual modes of scholarship and design, allowing me to explore issues ranging from climate and ecology, to health and domesticity, through a diverse variety of epistemological structures.
